MORTARBOARD

Dedication

Lorna F. McGuire

It is with gratitude and love that the Class of 1951 dedicates its Mortarboard to Associate Dean Lorna F. McGuire. Her wise understanding as our adviser and friend has enriched our years at Barnard, lightening our problems and indicating our potentialities. One of the nicest things about Dr. McGuire is her sane and candid sense of humor, which carries through from classroom to counselling. We see in her the poise and balance we would all like to achieve. Knowing her, we are not amazed by the aplomb with which she carries off her increasing administrative responsibilities. Because of her kindness to us, her service to Barnard, and her charm, the class of 1951 mingles affection with its admiration for Dr. McGuire.

Dwight D. Eisenhower

President or General or just plain 'Ike'—Dwight David Eisenhower is top man at Columbia! Barnard first saw his engaging grin when he was installed amid all the pomp and glory of the academic world. This thirteenth President of Columbia University brings to the ivory tower the prestige of a world-wide reputation and the capacity to carry on its traditions and standards.

Mrs. M. C. McIntosh

Entering Barnard with us as a fellow freshman, Dean Millicent C. McIntosh has proved herself one of the nation's outstanding educators. We have seen many constructive changes take place at Barnard under her leadership—the Student Annex, curriculum improvements and an atmosphere of unity and trust in the college community. She combines a warm personality with the wisdom that penetrates to the core of an idea and the force to realize her aims. We are sure that all Mrs. McIntosh has done foretells a proud future for Barnard.

Freshman

Hi, frosh!

Many of us helped to introduce the class of '53 to Barnard by participating as junior sponsors in the activities of Freshman Orientation. The program included a week-end in the dorms, a tour of the campus, a luncheon at which Miss Palmer and Professor Eliot addressed the freshmen and a Barnard-Columbia dance. The weekend concluded with the Campus Play-Day on Sunday afternoon.

"May we receive with gratitude."

Parents' Day

Among the innovations which Mrs. McIntosh brought to Barnard was Parents' Day. Our parents enjoyed it and we did too because it correlated the two aspects of our lives—home and school. Names that had appeared in after-dinner conversations and enthusiastic letters became more than names as our parents went to classes with us. They became acquainted with our lunch-rooms and visited the dormitories and the Student Annex. The day ended with a reception at which our parents met the Dean and heard her speak on the effect of Barnard on our thinking.

Class Advisers

Skilled in the intricacies of the Barnard catalog, as well as the more subtle problems of human relations, our class advisers guide us through our necessary one hundred-and-twenty points and help us to understand and solve our other problems.

The discus thrower.

Greek

The class of '51 was the first in Barnard's history never to win, yet not to lose two straight contests. Freshman year, we took part in the Artemis festivities and proudly remembered that we won Entrance, if nothing else. The historic 50-50 tie climaxed the next year's celebration, which was dedicated to Hermes, the mischievous god of thieves, dreams and communications.

Win, lose or draw, Greek Games was an exciting part of our Barnard lives. From the initial class announcement by Muriel Turtz and Lynn Kang, to the minute when the Entrance group heard the musical cue to appear in the curtained gym, to the final torch race, the tradition came alive for us. While parents and friends used our head-tax tickets, we shouted "Niké!" and cheered on our year.

Athletics

Athletics at Barnard were always the necessary supplement to our academic day. And though many of us had to suffer through a term of "correctives", most of us welcomed a chance at a fast game of basketball or badminton . . . or a leisurely round of golf. It was as part of the athletic program that we were able to compete against other colleges, hold our own college play festivals, and also nationwide college playdays.

Barnard Camp

Barbecued chicken.

Specifically for Barnard students who want to get away from it all, Barnard Camp, near Ossining, New York, provided many of us with a happy and hectic weekend. In our own time we saw (regretfully) the entrance of refined plumbing. But it was the "in-the-rough" atmosphere of camp that we all loved. We had to eat our own oatmeal, and struggle through rock-hard biscuits, and perhaps shiver through a winter night with two layers of clothing and ten blankets . . . but we still came back for more!

A final cigarette on Milbank porch is crushed out as the bell rings peremptorily. Labs or lectures, hygiene or history, freshman English or seminar—there are those who knit and those who take notes. When blue books put us in blue moods, we can always return to Milbank porch for solace in another cigarette.

Out of the classrooms and into a different world—or so it seems—for when studies are over, the social whirl begins. Being in New York, Barnard girls have the choice of a social life connected with college—square dances, proms, frat parties—or the sophisticated entertainment New York has to offer—night clubs, foreign restaurants and the theater.

Wigs and Cues

The glamour of the theater comes biannually to Barnard when the houselights are dimmed and Wigs and Cues brings on the play! In our time, the actresses and backstage crews have shown their versatility by producing such different plays as "She Stoops to Conquer," "Our Hearts Were Young and Gay," and "The Little Foxes." With this year's successful addition of men to the cast, Wigs and Cues seems more than ever like an Equity "A" company.

Even a community of free scholars must be governed and at Barnard the machinery regulating undergraduate lives begins with the elected Student Council, which may be considered the executive organ. The legislature in this miniature society is Representative Assembly, with Honor Board and the Court of Senior Proctors fulfilling the role of the judiciary. To continue the analogy of a federal government, the Residence Halls is the representative body with duties similar to those of a state legislature. Since the Barnard community is a small, homogeneous unit, there is more sympathy for the lawmakers and more understanding by the constituents of the necessity for specific regulations than is possible on the national scene.

Bulletin, the unofficial major of its staff members, appears on Jake twice a week after editors and staff members have batted out their brains on five hundred inches of copy. The first new typewriters in thirty-five years make life somewhat easier, but there is still a lot of work to be done before the final page is dummied and the paper is sent to press.

Student Curriculum Committee

"No morgue, free cuts, professors out of ruts, We'll bring the ivory tower up to date."

The increasingly important Student Curriculum Committee deserves credit for awakening and evaluating student opinion on major academic issues and making recommendations to the Administration. Open meetings and several polls paved the way for free cuts, a reading period before Comprehensives, and abolition of the morgue.

Book Coop

For those who think a course once finished is best forgotten, the Book Co-op provides quick cash and oblivion. For the bargain-hunter, popular texts are available at popular prices.

Reorganized this year, the Co-op enables those interested in economics to see the inside workings of the cooperative system and lightens the load on the student's pocketbook.

Religious Clubs

The religious clubs on campus enlarge the scope of the college community. All Barnard's groups are affiliated with their Columbia counterparts and have weekly meetings in Earl Hall devoted to discussions, lectures and social functions. In addition to the devotional services for the various faiths that are held regularly in the University Chapel, the clubs also arrange study groups, sponsor dances and assist in charitable drives and community work.

The weekly meetings of the Earl Hall Society serve to integrate the activities of the individual groups and act as a place where the viewpoints of the major faiths may be discussed. With the same spirit of understanding in mind, Barnard holds Thursday meetings in the College Parlor. Here faculty as well as outside speakers have addressed and touched off the sometimes weighty, sometimes witty discussions that follow the informal luncheon.

Muses Clubs

To complement its academic schedule, Barnard offers outlets for those with artistic talents. Through singing and dancing at assemblies and social gatherings, these organizations bring to Barnard the color that only art can give. Music Club and Dance Group have been active on campus for a long time, but the Octet—whose total number of members is not necessarily eight—is the newest addition to the Muses Clubs.

Diary - - - 1997

Following is the class history as written by Marion Bell and as recited on Class Night 1949

The purpose of this impromptu college assembly is to relate to you, the student body, a very important archeological treasure, unearthed yesterday in the Bendix washing machine on display in the McIntosh Museum. As you all know, this strange machine for washing clothes, and a bronze statue of a woman carrying a torch are the only remnants of the devastating fire of '63. Up to now we have gleaned very little knowledge of Barnard's past history. Now, however, upon the discovery of a tattered diary in the Bendix we have a skeletal outline of life as a student knew it from 1947 to '49. The members of the faculty spent all of last night in deciphering the parts of the diary still faintly readable, and I would now like to pass it on to you.

Oct. 7th: Wish I had gotten into Vassar or Smith!

Oct. 20th: Went to 10th class meeting today and we finally narrowed the presidential slate down to 18. . . . I was eliminated.

Nov. 1st: Geology is a damn waste of time.

Nov. 17th: Doctor McGuire told me to settle down today.

Nov. 18th: Went to bed early tonight and we had a fire drill.

Dec. 7th: Used to think about Pearl Harbor on this day but now all I can think of is Greek Games head tax . . . wonder what the hell it is.

Dec. 15th: I hope my family will notice how haggard I look.

Jan. 12th: Was accused of plagerism today because I forgot to put quotes around a quotation from the Bible.

Feb. 5th: Went to take my English exam today and was told there is no exam in English I!

Feb. 14th: Don't know which is worse—the morgue or Brooks living room.

March 6th: My name was in Bulletin today.

April 19th: If I were a Greek I'd be rather insulted by Greek Games. 1950 won. I was in entrance.

April 27th: The only trouble with spring in New York is that you can feel it, but you can't see it!

Fall - - - 1948

Sept. 21st: Wonderful to be back. At last I'll be taking a few courses I'm interested in; as well as French.

Oct. 8th: Wish people would quit meeting me on Jake!

Nov. 3rd: Our only holiday of the year came on Tuesday when I don't have any classes anyway.

Nov. 28th: Miss Holland told me to quit cutting gym.

Dec. 24th: If they had made vacation any shorter, we would've been here for Xmas.

April 6th: '51 really fouled Bulletin up. The whole paper was written around the headline, Sophs Win Greek Games. We tied, by God! I was in entrance again.

May 14th: Have all my exams on the first day.

Fall - - - 1949

August 1st: Spent my whole summer studying French, came back here two months early to take the exit, and God—I failed it again!!!

Sept. 20th: Met a transfer today who is majoring in Phys. Ed. She looks perfectly normal too.

Sept. 23rd: Am scared to death that our class is going to make Junior show into a third desperate attempt to win Greek Games.

Oct. 8th: If I ever have to spend another Saturday morning figuring out from a map whether Nurgig, Ablut, Ugh, or Orbu has the biggest library there's going to be hell to pay.

Oct. 14th: We didn't have a technicolor movie of The Birth of a Baby when we were freshman.

Oct. 21st: The Barnard Annex is wonderful, but I can't figure out why it has a front door.

Because the record stops abruptly in the middle of this student's junior year, the only thing we are able to ascertain is that she flunked out.

PRINTERS OF THE 1951 MORTARBOARD

Your annual is a graphic record of the college year . . . a picture-and-type story of its academic, athletic and social highlights. It is a keepsake that you will cherish throughout all your alumni years. As such, it deserves the best that modern processes of printed reproduction can provide. It is the constant aim of this organization to offer its college clients the newest trends in fine yearbook printing.
